POWER FROM THE RIVERS

Forecast of What "White Coal" is to Do for New England.

Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont report serious damages by river floods, the great streams running down from the north carrying more water than in any June since the memory of man. Incidentally, Worcester is informed that it is to be provided with about twice as much electric power for general use. That is the most competent evidence that the rivers of New England are being more and more put to working so hard as waterpower agencies that they will not be causing flood damages in the years to come.

With the way open for the developers to get into Maine for saving the power of the waters which run to waste and developing the electric plants for sending currents of three and four times present capacity to the cities, there would be still more economy up before the people, and less flood damages. The largest supplying electric company claims its operations in New England thus far have saved the burning of 450,000 tons of coal annually, and it will soon make the demand for that hard-to-get fuel smaller by as many more tons a year. It is already assured that if Maine were open to development this part of the United States could give up the burning of coal entirely.

One man who does a business which requires the use of electricity, recently told the Telegram that there is enough electric current coming to the city of Worcester now, to heat as well as light all the houses and provide power for the manufacturers who want it. He may have been misled, but he is sure that he would not be so sure that he was right, provided that electric power should be used to its absolute capacity and for such small expense that the people could afford to throw away their coal heaters and use the juice for warming and cooking.

However wrong his guess, the fact is that this part of the country is coming into its own in the matter of using its abundant "white coal" instead of the black stuff that is dug out of mines and then re-dug out of the hands of speculators, at tremendous cost to the people. It is not serious that the home fireman is tired of shoveling coal into the steam heater and taking care of the ashes, and that the housekeepers are sick of the incidental litter. It is serious that the cost of that kind of nuisance is too high for what it is worth, considering the fact that there is a better way of keeping the cold of winter out of the houses. The coal shovellers should be emancipated from slavery as well as the lamp trimmers, and the payers of coal bills should be exempt from the taxation of coal speculators. The rivers can provide the power for that purpose and be relieved of their bar habit of flooding the country at the same time. It is coming and Worcester is one of the five cities which are forcing it to come on faster—Worcester Telegram.

stretch of land at the junction of the White and Connecticut rivers. At the time of its settlement, the point was the head of navigation on the Connecticut river and the leader among its first settlers was Elias Lyman, who came from Northampton, Mass., and who during his life time was extensively engaged in the commercial interests of Connecticut river navigation.

In course of time a family mansion of the colonial architecture was built, and this today continues as the home of descendants of the first settlers of the name of Lyman and while much of the original estate is in streets and dwellings, today the old-time colonial garden remains intact and a feature of this garden is an asparagus bed that was started in 1816 that is 101 years ago, and that continues to yield an annual and generous crop. The bed has never been replanted with new roots, but because of an intelligent making of the original bed, its favorable location and its never neglected cultivation, it has maintained its existence and has given its owners in this present season and the first year of its second century a supply free from defects and in every way of the best quality. The bed from the first has ever been free from asparagus rust that has now become so frequent in all sections of New England.

The original making of the bed included the securing of an efficient drainage and as each winter set in, it had a dressing of manure and a like dressing of coarse salt on the opening of each spring. This method of care and cultivation is continued to this day, regardless of the claim of many that salt is a non-essential in the cultivation of asparagus.

TO DRAFT PHYSICIANS

Not Enough of Them Volunteer for War Work.

Washington, June 26.—The drafting of physicians selectively upon a basis of Federal classification by a medical census similar to the one recently taken in New York State, to obtain them for the Medical Reserve Corps, is urged by Major Karl Connel, Major Richard Derby, and Captain Frederick Van Buren of the New York committee for national defense, medical section, in a report to the council of national defense. They hold that the volunteer system of recruiting physicians has been a failure. Coincident with this recommendation, it was made known through the medical section of the council of national defense, that there was a decided shortage of physicians who were ready to volunteer for war work. In a report to the general medical board of the council, the committee said strong efforts were being urged through the State organizations to obtain these medical officers.

BRITISH RECRUITING

Method of Raising Troops Favored By Roosevelt.

New York, June 26.—Colonel Theodore Roosevelt has written an open letter to Brig. Gen. W. A. White, head of the British Recruiting Mission now in this country, expressing his cordial approval of the program of the mission, which he characterizes as "the quickest way of getting men from America to France," and wishing General White success in his campaign. Colonel Roosevelt's letter is as follows:

My Dear General White: Up to a few weeks ago it was a criminal offense to recruit aliens in this country. Now, by an act of Congress, our allies are at liberty to do so. Until this act was passed it was impossible to reach the half million men of military age in America, who are citizens of Great Britain and Canada.

Many of these men wanted to go to the war of their own accord, but the vast majority of them had no means of paying their way to England, and, moreover, were uncertain whether they would be accepted when they got there, while no provision would be made for their wives and families if they went.

Moreover, the law that has recently been enacted by Congress enables the British and Canadian Governments to enlist their nationals who were residing here. Any British or Canadian citizen can go to the nearest United States Army recruiting station and be forwarded, if fit, either to Canada or to England at the expense of his Government.

Such a man is put on the payroll as soon as he is accepted, and if he has a wife she gets a separation allowance. While waiting for passage across the Atlantic he will be given preliminary training, so that no time is wasted.

The average training in England is fourteen weeks, which is followed by two months' training behind the lines or actually in the trenches in France. Therefore, in less than six months from the day of enlistment the recruit may take part in offensive operations. Under existing conditions, the quickest way of getting men from America to France is as above outlined. All British recruits who are enlisted in this country within the next two months can be and probably will be in France this year.

Therefore, it is not only to the interest of the British Government, but it is to the interest of the United States; it is to the interest of every one in this country to assist the British Army in the enlistment of these men. I wish you all possible success. Faithfully yours,

Theodore Roosevelt.
Officers of the British mission express themselves as well satisfied with the result of their campaign to date. Upward of 2,000 men have already offered themselves, and it is expected that the rate of enlistment will increase rather than decrease as the object of the mission becomes more generally known in this country.

"The fact that the elephant's feet are padded renders his step noiseless, in spite of his great weight," a naturalist tells us, "and his extraordinary nimbleness seems almost incompatible with his great bulk."

DOING THEIR DUTY

Scores of Bennington Readers are Learning the Duty of the Kidneys.

To filter the blood is the kidneys' duty. When they fail to do this the kidneys are weak. Backache and other kidney ills may follow. Help the kidneys do their work. Use Doan's Kidney Pills—the tested kidney remedy. Bennington people endorse their worth.

Mrs. C. H. Robinson, 225 Depot St., Bennington, says: "I have used Doan's Kidney Pills off and on for the past four or five years whenever I have suffered from kidney complaint. At times my back becomes sore and lame, and it is difficult for me to stoop over or bend. Whenever these attacks come on, I use Doan's Kidney Pills and they always relieve the attack."
